

Lake Texoma started over its 2,000-foot spillway Tuesday before dawn. Swollen by record rainfall to its 640-foot elevation crest, the lake was overflowing at a depth of four inches in this photo. It's the first overflow for the reservoir since its completion in 1944. Engineers call it a "once in 100 year occurrence".

Jury Convicts Dope King on 14 Counts

By J. NELSON TAYLOR

George Stine Smith, 49, Spencer nightclub operator, charged by the government as the kingpin operator of a far flung heroin and marijuana empire, was convicted Tuesday by a federal court jury that deliberated only 22 minutes.

Smith, flashily dressed in a red and blue candy-striped shirt, was found guilty of all 14 counts of possession and sale of narcotics. Maximum sentence on all counts could mean penalties of up to 320 years in prison and a total fine of $280,000.

He Says Germany Wants to Stay Out

WASHINGTON, May 28 (AP)—Chancellor Konrad Adenauer ended his talks with President Eisenhower Tuesday and promptly made known his opposition to including Germany in any initial disarmament agreement with Russia.

Rivers Falling To Ease State Flood Danger

For the first time in weeks an end to flooding in the state appeared near as swollen rivers started dropping rapidly under sunny skies.

Conditions were so improved below Denison dam on Lake Texoma that floodgates were opened for the first time in almost a week, and with the exception of the Verdigris river, flood waters were

House Refuses To Soften Cuts In Army Funds

GOP Beaten Off In First Attempt To Restore Money

WASHINGTON, May 28 (AP)—House Democrats aided by some Republicans Tuesday beat down the first attempt by GOP leaders to soften sharp cuts in President Eisenhower's defense budget.

By a standing vote of 145-113, the house defeated an amendment to give the army $80 millions more for maintenance and operation than the house appropriations committee had recommended.

About 20 Republicans deserted their leaders to vote against the amendment. Seven Democrats supported the amendment.

House Republican leaders announced Monday they would try to restore about $332 millions of cuts recommended by the appropriations committee. Eisenhower has called for restoration of $1,200,000,000 of committee cuts totaling $2 1/2 billions.

Ike Is 'Not Happy'

Even before Monday's Republican move was defeated, Eisenhower was described as "not happy" about the extent of the battle that GOP leaders were launching.

The Republican chiefs still plan to offer amendments that would add the rest of the $332 millions week, inundated about 120 acres of lowland farms across the border in Arkansas today. The river crested Monday night at Van Buren at 36.35 feet, more than 14 feet above flood stage. Both Van Buren and Fort Smith, however, are protected by levees.

Weather Co-operates

The weather was co-operating to bring an end to the floods. Wednesday's weather forecast included "isolated showers mainly in the west portion," and the outlook for Memorial day—Thursday—called for a few more showers, but only in the west.

Forecasters explained a high pressure system is building up over the Rocky mountains and the central United States, cutting off the flow of humid tropical air from the Gulf, and at the same time, eliminating the "trigger" which have caused heavy rains in Oklahoma.

The Lake Texoma floodgate, one of six, was opened Tuesday afternoon.

With the huge, man-made lake 6 inches above spillway, water was thundering over spillway at 10,000 cubic feet a second, and a discharge of 15,000 cfs was gushing through the gates.

Lake Still Climbing

The lake was still climbing slowly, with an inflow of 70,000 cfs. Engineers said additional floodgates will be opened with the improvement of conditions downstream on the Red river.

The Red was still rising at Fulton, Ark., but falling rapidly at Archer City, the first river check point below the dam.

Dennison's gates have been closed since May 23 to allow the Red to recede, and Tuesday was the first time in 33 years—since the dam was built—that lake water has topped the spillways.

Many of Texoma's resorts are still under water and two firms located below the spillway, the Yellow Jacket Boat Co., and the Theakston Corp., have shut down.

Way Is Cleared To End Session

The Republicans attempt to restore the $323 millions represents something of a switch. Many Republicans have been as hot, or hotter, for cutting the budget as Democrats have been. When the 50-man appropriations committee passed along its recommendations to the house, only one member—Rep. Canfield (R., N. J.)—asked to be recorded against the $2½ billions cut.

Sharp Cuts Seen

This cut includes $1,300,000,000 which Eisenhower has described as simply a bookkeeping operation. It is the other $1,200,000,000 which he says would trike at vital items.

Martin told reporters that if the committee cut stands, the army will have to be cut by about 10,000 men, the navy by about 9,500 and the marines by about 3,000. He also said two destroyers, apparently planned to be armed with guided missiles, might be lost from the fleet.

The bill as approved by the committee carries $33,541,225,000, with the lion's share for the air force.

A senate appropriations subcommittee Tuesday took testimony from Secretary of the Navy Thomas Gates and Adm. Arleigh A. Burke, chief of naval operations.

Gates said that if the committee cuts stand, the navy will have to curtail its programs for new ships and aircraft. He added:

"Any cutbacks of ships or aircraft will impair our future military readiness."

Red Menace Cited

Burke, among other things, said the Russian submarine menace is great, and added in that connection:

"If we get into a war we're going to lose ships. We may lose a lot of ships. It will be a rough show. But I think we can handle the situation."

Burke also said the Soviets now have, or soon will have, atomic submarines.

The house debated the defense appropriation bill Wednesday afternoon, with Martin saying the proposed cuts would require drastic adjustments.

He listed army, navy and marine corps personnel cuts similar to those he mentioned at the White House and said the air force, too, would have to be reduced by 9,500 men.

Besides the manpower reductions, he said the committee cuts would eliminate "some 100 aircraft," two modern destroyers and a guided missile destroyer from the navy, require replacement of "essential civilian personnel" with military personnel, and force "drastic readjustments" in procurement of planes and missiles for the air force.

"I am not one of those who believes the communist forces are on the retreat," Martin said. "The Soviet forces do not dare to attack so long as we stay strong. . . . This is not the hour to reduce."

Toddler Dies

He was named, said Espinosa, O. Beer of San Mateo, Calif., master of the Uvalde, "because he thought we would kill him the moment he let go of his pistol."

"We could have killed him a thousand times. All I had to do was to say 'shoot him' and he would be dead."

At one point Cmdr. Herman D. Schnurr, senior chaplain of the Treasure Island naval base, asked Henderson what he was thinking, and the sailor replied:

"I was just thinking that if I shot the captain, they would have to shoot me, and it would be all over."

Instead he finally surrendered in the pilot house when Col. Edmund M. Williams, commandant of the marines at Treasure Island in San Francisco bay, promised he would take Henderson off the ship as his personal prisoner, would not put handcuffs on him, and would see that he was supplied with both civilian and naval counsel.

Just as Henderson turned over his loaded pistol, a marine sergeant was bringing two tear gas canisters onto the bridge. It was then 12:25, six hours and 10 minutes after the shooting.

The tall, quiet sailor did not avail himself of the offer of counsel before talking freely to newsmen. He was interviewed after a preliminary psychiatric examination showed him "as sane as anyone else."

Henderson told, with only slight hesitation, of planning and carrying out the shooting.

with Soviet representatives earlier this month.

Russia countered by suggesting a different European arms control area and by proposing that part of Siberia be opened to aerial inspection in return for inspection of the western United States and Alaska.

In replying to reporters' questions, Adenauer made it clear he wanted aerial inspection of Germany put off until a later second stage disarmament agreement. He also opposed the idea of any cuts in manpower and weapons in western Europe in any initial pact.

Earlier in the day, Eisenhower and Adenauer issued a communique setting forth some of their views after their three days of conferences. The communique contained these points:

1. Eisenhower pledged to consult closely with Adenauer's government "on all matters affecting Germany arising in the disarmament negotiations," especially the link between European security and German reunification.

erson said he had found the watch and did not return it to its owner because he was accused of stealing it. He was sentenced to four months at hard labor and demoted from disbursing clerk 3c. to seaman. He had only four months to complete his enlistment.

He had served since September 6 as assistant to Morris, the ship's paymaster and legal officer.

Henderson shot him once in the head as he sat on the edge of his bunk.

Harrison was shot in the stomach and arm after he tried to keep the sailor from reaching Morris. He was reported in "serious but satisfactory" condition at Oak Knoll naval hospital in Oakland.

After the shooting Henderson fled to the bridge, taking along as a voluntary hostage radarman Robert W. Lakey, 20, of Springfield, Ore. Lakey said the berserk sailor never threatened him nor anyone else, but kept the gun continually in his hand.

Pursuing them to the bridge, armed with a riot gun, was Lieut. Henry J. Sidford, Troy, N. Y. Sidford, whose cabin was next to that of the shot officers, spread the alarm and was alternately leadoff man in the armed guard and the unarmed persuaders who tried to talk Henderson into surrendering.

Sidford said reports of four hostages probably derived from the number of armed men and others who came to the flying bridge in the early hours of the armed standoff.
